

LeRoy E. Reese, Ph.D.

Dr. Reese is an associate professor in the Departments of Psychiatry and Community Health and Preventive Medicine at Morehouse School of Medicine where he trains and provides clinical supervision to child and adolescent psychiatry fellows. He is Director of Behavioral Health at Akoma Counseling & Consulting, Inc. an outpatient behavioral health practice in Atlanta serving children, adults and families. Previously, Dr. Reese was a senior scientist and section chief at the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

A widely published author, he served on the Task Force of the American Psychological Association that produced the report Resilience and Strength in African American Children and Adolescents and co-edited a commonly used prevention textbook, Realizing Social Justice: The Challenge of Preventive Interventions. He has consulted with the Annie E. Casey Foundation in their efforts to reform juvenile justice policy and practice in Georgia and nationally and has been a consultant to several institutes at the National Institutes of Health. Clinically, Dr. Reese works primarily with an adolescent and young adult male patient census. His research focuses on health equity as a civil rights imperative and the intersection of physical and behavioral health.

Dr. Reese received his doctorate from The Ohio State University. He did his internship and fellowship at the University of Illinois Medical School's Institute for Juvenile Research in the Department of Psychiatry. He completed his undergraduate studies at The College of Wooster.
